What mutual fund managers are doing in the current market?

7 Lessons from My Many Investing Failures

While most of the analysts keep boasting about their success stories, there are few brave and candid ones who publish their failures too. Of course, they learn from those mistakes. We are presenting an article from JIM WANG, a famous blogger and entrepreneur. In this article we are presenting only 2 of his mistakes.

The internet is full of stories about how so and so made a bundle selling their home or some hot stock investment.

What the internet doesn't have a lot of are stories of investing failures.

We all have them, but few people talk about them because they're not sexy. In our social media driven world fueled with highlight reels, lowlights have no place.

But every success is coupled with many failures.

Failures are bad outcomes on the path to success. We can learn a lot from them. And you can learn a lot from mine, without the financial pain. □

Failure is Part of the Process

One of the reasons I invested in a variety of areas is to diversify. The stock market is a fantastic way to invest but it goes up and down so easily based on things unconnected to the underlying investments. Diversification is about making a group of uncorrelated bets.

“Do not invest your 401(k) (Provident Fund Money) in company stock.”

Your job and primary source of income should be diversified from your retirement savings.

If your company is doing well, you probably won't be fired. If your company is doing poorly, you might be fired. If your company is doing poorly and you're fired, your 401(k) holdings will probably go down too since the company is doing badly. Those two bets are correlated... and that's bad.

“Invest X% of your portfolio in stocks, where X is 120 minus your age.” is another famous rule of thumb. You want to take on some risk (volatility) but not too much relative to your age. As you near retirement, you want less volatility because you'll need to cash out the holdings.

When you allocate your investable assets, you don't want 100% to be in the stock market. You might mix it up and put some in real estate, some in private placements, and some others in even more exotic vehicles. (You can get started in real estate with less than $1,000)

Failure in some is to be expected because you can't bat 100% across a variety of asset classes.

Heck, you can't bat 100% within an asset class (like U.S. equities). You have to expect a little bit of failure to get the wins and if you can't handle overt failure, you should just take the tiny ~1% savings interest rate and let your money lose purchasing power to inflation.

Does that mean you should invest in art? Or Whisky? (Both are considered collectibles)

Beware Who You Trust

When you invest in someone else, you're trusted them to be a steward of your money. Here's the catch... no one washes a rental car. They didn't bleed for that money. They just had to give a presentation and convince you to give it to them. They don't value your money like they value money they earned or that they borrowed from their family.

If the deal goes south, they can walk away because there are plenty of investors out there.
