US-based private equity firm Warburg Pincus-backed Computer Age Management Services (CAMS) remained strong throughout the session, though there was some profit taking at higher. The stock closed at Rs 1,401.60 on the BSE, rising 14 percent over its issue price of Rs 1,230 on trading volumes of 1,31,80,743 equity shares. However, the stock lost 7.67 percent from its opening price of Rs 1,518. CAMS listed at Rs 1,518 (a 23.4 percent premium over its issue price) and rallied up to Rs 1,550 in initial trade. In the initial 15 minutes of trade, the counter witnessed volatile trade and hit the day's low of Rs 1,306.20. It immediately recovered to Rs 1,500 and largely managed to hold Rs 1,400 levels for the rest of the day.

CAMS is a technology-driven financial infrastructure and services provider to mutual funds and other financial institutions. It is India's largest registrar and transfer agent (RTA) of MFs, with 70 percent market share in-terms of average asset under management (AAUM) as Chemcon Speciality Chemicals, the speciality chemicals maker for pharmaceutical and oilfield industries, opened with a strong 115 percent premium but failed to hold on to all listing gains at close on October 1. The listing premium was definitely higher than Happiest Minds Technologies (111 percent premium). The stock opened at Rs 730.95 on the BSE, climbed up to Rs 743.80 but immediately slipped below Rs 700. It witnessed further profit booking in afternoon and dropped below Rs 600. The stock finally settled with 72 percent gains at Rs 584.80 on the BSE as well as National Stock Exchange from its issue price of Rs 340. However, the stock was locked in a 20 percent lower circuit due to profit booking despite more than a 600 points rally on the Sensex.

Trading volumes stood at 19,44,906 and 1,57,79,162 shares in the cash segment of BSE and NSE, respectively.

Share price of PVR and Inox Leisure jumped over 12 percent each in the morning session after the government allowed cinemas, theatres, and multiplexes to operate with up to 50 percent of their seating capacity.

The Central Government announced the reopening of cinema halls with 50 percent occupancy across the country barring the containment zones from October 15.

The Multiplex Association of India (MAI) on Wednesday "wholeheartedly" welcomed the Union Home Ministry's guidelines, permitting the opening up of cinema halls outside the containment zones from October 15.

In a statement, the MAI said the home ministry's decision was awaited by "millions of movie lovers, employees of the cinema exhibition sector, along with the entire film industry."

The Five Pillars Of Wealth Building (Part V)

Dear readers, we are continuing with a series of articles on the topic of 'Wealth Building'. The article is taken from <https://dariusforoux.com/five-pillars-of-wealth-building/>.

In this concluding part we will visit the 4th and the 5th pillar of Asset Investing. During our 10 years of career we have experienced and have realized that Asset protection and Capital allocation are very important pillars of wealth building.

4. Asset Protection

When you build wealth, you want to protect that from external factors. Once you've acquired some wealth, you're a target. That means you want to keep your assets safe from legal situations. This is the fourth pillar of wealth building.

You want to structure your wealth in a way that minimizes your risk. This has everything to do with financial laws. The point of asset protection is that you want to mind your own business and make sure your assets are protected at the same time.

And when you do get claims for any reason, you'll be in a stronger position to handle that if you have your asset protection strategy in order. Some people also think of tax laws when they talk about asset protection. While I'm a proponent of paying taxes, you don't want to pay more than required.

At this stage of wealth building, you'll have lawyers and accountants who take care of these things. It's the least interesting and exciting part of wealth building, but it deserves to be mentioned.

5. Capital Allocation

At some point, you've acquired so much wealth that the only thing you're doing is moving around your resources. This is the fifth and final pillar. You might sell one stock and buy another one. You might liquidate a business and start a new one. You might sell land and buy a cash-generating asset. And all the while, you're still generating value and cash. This is all that Berkshire Hathaway does. They are in the capital allocation business.

You simply look at where the opportunities are for the biggest return. Now, if you're an ethical investor like Warren Buffett, you allocate your capital in a way that value and jobs are created. You keep the wealth flowing and you don't hoard it. What's that good for? Hoarding money and wealth is fearful behavior. Successful investors put their wealth to work, not to rest.

Ultimately, that's the purpose of investing: To increase the pie. People who want to take a bigger piece of the existing pie are the parasites of our society. Those people are the zero-sum thinkers.

The ones who allocate their capital to things that make the world better are the ones who contribute to progress. These are the people who build new businesses, develop real estate, or create technology that increases the size of the pie.

Building wealth is always a group activity. I never understand why people are against progress and change. I do understand why some people don't like those things. Progress is hard and requires effort.

But if you do it right, wealth building will not only benefit you and your family, it will also generate an impact on the economy, jobs, and lives of other people.
